

Leading Light

The framework and hanging support are stainless steel

We've seen many stunning fixtures, both interior and exterior, at the resorts which have blossomed in these islands, but the conch pendant which graces the porte cochere of the West Bay Club deserves special mention.

This unique globe of light utilized the distinctive shell of an icon of the islands, the Queen Conch, in a novel and elegant way, to shed light on the entrance to this lovely new resort.

The concept was dreamed up by Simon Wood and Rebecca Huggins of Simon Wood Architects. They asked local artist Pam Leach if she could transform the drawings into reality.

Pam thought she could and conferred with Mike Robertson, a stainless and aluminum welder, to discuss a framework for the conch shells that would create the magical pearly pink light.

Mike welded up the stainless steel globe. It's latitude lines were formed with round bar; lines of longitude were created from stainless steel flat bar in which he drilled small holes to enable Pam to attach the shells to the framework with monel wire. Stainless steel and monel materials ensure that, in the salt laden breeze of the islands, the light fixture would not rust.

Meanwhile, at the Caicos Conch Farm, under Pam's direction, conch shells were cut to reveal their spiral structure. Pam handpicked and fastened each shell to the globe, to create the conch pendant.

Day and night the distinctive orb throws a soft pink light on arriving and departing guests at the resort.

The framework and hanging support are stainless steel

The Luxurious Lifestyle

and warm hospitality are calling...

Recapture your sense of luxury at the latest elegant resort addition to the tranquil shores of Grace Bay, Providenciales; creating new standards with its extraordinary location, chic architecture, superior finishes and luxuriously appointed oceanfront suites,

West Bay Club offers guests the personal service of a boutique hotel, the warmth, sophistication and attention to detail of a private members club and exceptional amenities; Spa, state of the art fitness centre, wedding, event & provisioning services and a delectable restaurant, Atlantic Bar & Grill.

Wouldn't you rather be here?

www.thewestbayclub.com US TOLL FREE 866-607-4156 or DIRECT 649-946-8550

